

Rob Hallewick is the co-founder of Nerva Energy Group, which specializes in large custom energy efficiency projects. As an energy efficiency consultant and implementation expert, Rob has worked with many engineering firms over the years to assist with practical solutions for the implementation of mechanical systems and improvements within the commercial and industrial sector. Rob is a licensed refrigeration and natural gas technician, and through his experience in the mechanical field for more than 18 years he has developed a deep understanding of all building technologies, including electrical, pipefitting, HVAC/R and automation. He previously managed a division of Southwest Energy specializin in energy efficiency consultation and project design/implementation and has experience running crews and organizing large scale projects within the commercial sector